

THE GLOBAL NOMAD
COURTNEY ADAMO
 CO-FOUNDER, BABYCCINO

Traveling with four children (and a fifth due soon) equals better, more memorable experiences, says Adamo, cofounder of shopping portal Babyccino and a prolific Instagrammer. She and her husband, Michael, left city life in London and traveled the world with their family for a year, homeschooling on the road. One stop was the small town of Byron Bay, Australia, where, smitten with its natural beauty and creative community, they decided to permanently move. "Some people feel that having children means putting travel dreams on hold," she says. "But when I think about this past year — surfing in Chile, exploring temples in Kyoto — I'd say that traveling with children makes it easier to connect to new places and make new friends. Our children see there are many recipes for a 'successful' life."

ON HER RADAR

JOSÉ IGNACIO, URUGUAY

"This fishing village springs to life each summer, attracting international travelers and friendly Uruguayans. We loved the country's family-friendly culture, European sensibilities, and unspoiled nature."

◆ STAY Estancia

Vik, a 12-suite Spanish colonial ranch situated on pristine farmland close to the beach, was crafted by Uruguayan architects and artists. "Uruguay is low-key and chic," says Richmond, Virginia-based advisor Caroline Wallace. "Visit between November and March, and don't miss two of my favorite restaurants — La Huella in José Ignacio and La Susana at Bahía Vik." Doubles from $440, including breakfast daily and one lunch or dinner for two.

ARUGAM BAY, SRI LANKA "We loved that we could spend the morning in the waves and the afternoon observing elephants and crocodiles in their natural habitat. Sri Lankan food was our favorite cuisine of the year. Curry for breakfast, lunch, and dinner — yes, please!"

RAGLAN, NEW ZEALAND "Shoes are optional in this friendly surf town on the west coast of the North Island. Raglan attracts a young and international mix of travelers determined to relax and enjoy the ample spoils Mother Nature has endowed upon New Zealand."
